Workshop Description

Independent School Board work can be challenging. We build our boards with an eye towards diversity of all kinds, including diversity of thought. Then, we sometimes find ourselves frustrated when we can't reach consensus or find a way to move forward on important issues. Fortunately, there are some valuable board practices that can reap the benefits of high board engagement and different points of view while minimizing disruption and disappointment. Join our session with Independent School Consultant Lynn Wendell to learn more about how your board can remain strategically effective during challenging times.

About the Presenter

Lynn Wendell has advised nonprofit boards in California, on the east coast, and internationally since 2005. Most of Lynn's work has been in the independent school community, although in the past three years, she has expanded to serve other kinds of nonprofits in a variety of capacities. For more than 20 years before offering her services to others, Lynn served on the boards of trustees of three San Francisco independent schools. In addition, Lynn has served as vice-chair of Northern California for the UC Berkeley Parents Fund, co-chair of the Dartmouth Parents Fund, class captain of the Williams College Parent Fund, and a member of the Summerbridge San Francisco Advisory Board. She is a former member of the advisory board for the UC Berkeley Graduate School of Education, and a former member of the development committee of KIPP Bay Area Schools. She is currently a member of the executive committee of the Golden Gate National Parks Conservancy. She is a past member of the trustee committee of the California Association of Independent Schools (CAIS) and has presented at a number of CAIS annual conferences and workshops. She is also a board member and on the executive committee of the Independent Schools Chairpersons Association (ISCA).
