What All Teachers and School Leaders Need to Know About the Learning Brain (in the Age of AI)

Who: Heads of School, Division Heads

When: Tuesday November 12th, 2024 from 9:00 to 10:00 a.m.

Where: Virtual on Zoom

Description:

There is one indisputable educational truth. Every day, every student, in every school will have their brain with them. Shouldn't then all teachers and school leaders have a foundational understanding of the science behind how the brain learns? Unfortunately, a student must get lucky to have a teacher or school leader who understands the most promising research and strategies in the field of Mind, Brain, and Education (MBE) especially at a time when AI tools are being further integrated into the student's learning experience.

This session shares the MBE evidence base and the most promising PK-12th grade research and strategies that teachers and school leaders need to consider in their school's content with their school's context, as well as how AI aligns with what we know about how the brain learns.

Participants will return to their schools, programs, and organizations with some fresh perspectives and "next-day" ideas for beginning or elevating ways students learn and create and how teachers work and grow their "right-time" use of this powerful tool.
